This public roundtable will reflect on how engaged research may be practiced and what challenges it may encounter. The participants will reflect on research engagement - including engaged ethnographies - with a focus on migration, forced displacement and their broader social contexts.

Much research on migration and conflict resolution produce 'expertise' that excludes the subjects of research from knowledge-production. In what ways may we conduct academic inquiries that challenge these inequalities and hierarchies.

The roundtable is part of the CEU Summer University Course 'Conceptualizing, Navigating and Representing the Field in Migration Studies'.
